‘Biggest Swell in Years’ Slams Bondi Beach with 12ft Bomb Sets (Video)

However, a strong pulse of south swell, one dubbed perhaps “the biggest south swell in years,” slammed the coastal Sydney suburb over the weekend.

Dashel Pierson · Surfer Magazine

While Bondi Beach may be one of Australia’s most popular shorelines, it’s not known typically for surf – there are plenty of other waves that regularly produce world-class surf in the region, leaving Bondi for the sunbathing and splish-splashing crowd.

However, a strong pulse of south swell, one dubbed perhaps “the biggest south swell in years,” slammed the coastal Sydney suburb over the weekend.

And a handful of surfers paddled out, with crowds on the headlands watching on, to witness the potentially historic waves, pushing into the 12-foot range. See below.

Elsewhere, in the leadup to the incoming south swell, which bubbled up from Tasman Sea, and made its way towards the East Coast of Australia, Surfline had high hopes, claiming, “The biggest S swell in years is lining up this weekend.” They continued :

“An intense low tightens up near the NSW coast, then pulls away Friday evening as winds ramp up and a broad storm field sets from Tasmania to the Mid North Coast. XL surf builds overnight, with Saturday morning shaping up as possibly one of the biggest days in years. Expect a messy mix. There will be plenty of shorter period storm surf and wind chop stacked through the swell, with occasional long period bomb sets swinging through and catching plenty of crews out.”

Officials urged those looking to witness the potentially historic swell to heed caution:

“A reminder from today for swell watchers to be prepared for the unexpected as the waves can get sneaky and leave you saturated or swept away, especially at Dee Why pool!”

Stay tuned; more to come from this run of swell.

Life and Death in Singapore

SiriusXM Podcasts and Roman Mars · 99% Invisible

When Singapore gained its independence they went on a mission to re-house the population from densely-packed thatched roof huts into giant concrete skyscrapers. In 1960, they formed the Housing and Development Board, or HDB, and just five years later they had already housed 400,000 people! In Singapore, where land is scarce, it’s not unlikely for apartment buildings to be built on top of land that was graveyards not too long ago. But building on top of a graveyard has its complications.

Liquids, “Brady Math,” and Road Super Shoes: How Riley Brady Got So Fast

RUN | Powered by Outside · Trail Runner Magazine

Editor’s Note: In anticipation of Riley Brady toeing the line as a top contender at the 2025 Western States 100 on June 28, we’re looking back on their meteoric rise.

Theoretically, Riley Brady didn’t need to kick into the finish line at the 2024 Javelina Jundred on October 26. The non-binary runner from Boulder, Colorado, had forged nearly a 20-minute gap over second-place woman Hannah Allgood during the last 99 and a half miles.

But they needed to kick it in nonetheless.

“I never feel like I have the win in the bag,” Brady said. “A race is not over ‘til it’s over. When people show up at a finish line and stop and walk across the line, I’m like, ‘You don’t know who’s back there! You don’t know who’s gonna sprint pass you!’ You have to Zack-Miller-finish this race. You should be sprinting as fast as you can across that line, and then you can collapse, or walk, or do whatever you want.”

And that’s exactly what Brady did. The glow of their headlamp bobbed through the darkness, rounded the turn into the iridescent tent city that makes up the Javelina headquarters, and zoomed down the seemingly never-ending straight away. Brady zipped across the finish line and in one fluid motion doubled over, hands precariously holding the upper half of their body up on their knees.

They stopped the clock in 14:19:01—the second fastest time ever in the women’s race on a historically hot day that saw the thermometer creep up to 100 degrees Fahrenheit.

It’s their third consecutive Javelina Jundred podium, second golden ticket into Western States, and first win at the Burning-Man-meets-Halloween-meets-ultrarunning rave in Fountain Hills, Arizona. But simply examining those three data points from the end of October in 2022, 2023, and now 2024 leaves out much of the story—including why you may not even know who this very legitimate contender at the 2025 Western States 100 even is.

Here’s how the 29-year-old bike mechanic torched the Javelina Jundred this fall.

1. A Liquid Diet

Heading into Javelina in October, there was no question to those that know them that Brady was fit. Scary fit. (This author understood this deeply first hand, having had the privilege of getting dropped by Brady many times on long runs and workouts over the past year.) The big question was: could their stomach hold it together enough to let their fitness shine?

Violent nausea and vomiting that reduced Brady to the fetal position on the side of the trail had been their downfall in longer races ever since earning a golden ticket with a second-place finish at Javelina in 2022, including at Western States itself in 2023, Black Canyon 100K and Javelina in 2023, and the Black Canyon, Canyons 100K (where they were also sick with a virus), and CCC 100K earlier this year.

“I’ve always thrown up in races, and it’s been an easy puke and rally,” Brady said. “But this vomiting was so violent I couldn’t hold my body up. It’s very different when it’s like you just take a gel and it doesn’t sit right so you just kind of throw up. You’re not collapsed on the ground.”

Enough was enough.

Brady enlisted the expertise of Vic Johnson, a registered dietitian who specializes in working with mountain athletes. Sweat testing revealed that Brady’s sweat and salt rates were both on the low end, and yet they had not been hydrating sufficiently during races. Johnson set Brady a minimum of drinking 500mL an hour.

“That’s one bottle an hour, which is quite low,” Brady said. “There have been times when I’ve definitely been drinking less than that, so he was like, ‘Once you start losing two to three percent of your body weight, that’s when we start to see those kinds of stomach issues come into play.’”

Under Johnson’s guidance, Brady also started experimenting with more liquid calories and fewer gels, the texture of which immediately sent Brady’s gag reflexes on high alert. As the forecast called for temperatures reaching dangerously close to triple digits, that strategy proved especially prescient.

Brady amused themselves by listening and singing along to an eclectic playlist that included a lot of country (Sturgill Simpson, Dolly Parton, Alan Jackson, etc.), some pop (Chappell Roan, Taylor Swift, Beyoncé, etc.), and musical theater (Phantom of the Opera, Footloose). (Photo: Howie Stern)

Brady did their best to drink 500 mL per hour on lap one of the five-lap course. The sun had yet to shine its wrath on the desert, and they probably fell a little short. But they were running well inside of themselves, just ahead of the lead women’s pack, and diligently downed a bottle of Skratch and Gatorade from aid stations on course, as well as a gel. (Aid stations also supplied Gu Roctane, but they didn’t have the Tea flavor and that’s the only flavor Brady doesn’t find repulsive.)

“The Gatorade tasted a little bit like a cleaning chemical, but it was good enough that I could get it down,” Brady said. “So I was like, ‘All right, I’m getting some calories, some salt from this.’”

Starting the third lap, Brady attempted to down a Precision Nutrition caffeine gel, which they had mixed into water in their soft flask just as they had done in training “because the texture is disgusting.” Their tried-and-true plan failed.

“I immediately threw up,” Brady said. “And I was like, ‘OK, I’m just going to run this out.’”

'Wave Pool King' Stomps NBD Superman 360 Shuv-It at Waco Surf (Video)

Dashel Pierson · Surfer Magazine

Jacob "Zeke" Szekely is many things, but humble is not one of them.

The San Diego native is one of surfing's biggest characters, making a name for himself early on by winning a competition while wearing a court-ordered ankle bracelet, turning his life around, and becoming one of the most prolific surf vloggers in the game.

And what he lacks in humility, he makes up for in hard work. Like pushing the limits in terms of sticking new tricks, particularly in surf parks, and dubbing himself "the king of wave pools." And Zeke has a new one for his extensive bag of never-before-done tricks, a superman air into a 360 shuv-it, landed at Waco Surf deep in the heart of Texas.

'Michael Jordan' Dolphin Soars 15 Ft Above Maui Sea, Stuns Researchers

Dashel Pierson · Surfer Magazine

Off the coast of Maui, a high-flying dolphin was captured on camera by a group of wildlife experts, with them dubbing it, "the Michael Jordan of dolphins."

The Pacific Whale Foundation, a nonprofit dedicated to protecting the ocean through science and advocacy, captured the momentous jump while doing field research. And while dolphins are known to leap from the water, this one was particularly huge.

Captioning the capture, The Pacific Whale Foundation wrote:

"THIS IS NOT AI  Introducing the Michael Jordan of Dolphins, Air Dolphin estimated jump 15 ft in the air. This incredible shot was captured by our research team in the field.

"To put that into perspective: Pantropical spotted dolphins grow to about 6–7 feet long and weigh around 250 pounds. If a human could match this feat relative to their body size, it would be like jumping clear over a basketball hoop.

"Pantropical spotted dolphins are found in tropical and subtropical waters around the world. These energetic dolphins are highly social and are often seen traveling with other species like rough-toothed dolphins, short-finned pilot whales, and spinner dolphins."

As the photo made its rounds on social media, morning news outlets also picked up on the dolphin flying through the air for their feel-good segments, supplemented with remarks like "what a shot!" and "I've never seen anything like that" and "weeee!"

The Pacific Whale Foundation, for their part, does eco-tours for groups on Maui with the proceeds going towards research, education, conservation, and outreach to provide to provide ocean and marine life protection.

In addition to the science and activism, they occasionally witness once-in-a-lifetime moments. Learn more about the Pacific Whale Foundation here .
